Funding is used to: (1) to create educational podcasts and informational web-content for the public, and (2) to add to a research archive that can be used by scholars now and in the future.

Population Dynamics in Greenland – A Multi-Component, Mixed-Method Study of Demographic Change in the Artic. Role: Co-investigator with PI Virginia Vitzthum (Indiana University-Bloomington) and Elizabeth Rink (Montana State University). Funded by NSF (PLR 1319663), 5/1/14 - 4/30/19, $741,958 total to IU. The major goal: Through a process known as community-based participatory research, the team will work with local residents to develop a research design that targets pressing local issues, such as migration and reproductive choices, as well as questions of global significance such as how a changing environment impacts health and reproduction.

Condom Use and Sexual Behaviors When Bleeding and Not Bleeding. Role: Principal Investigator with Kinsey Institute Condom Use Research Team & Virginia Vitzthum (Co-Investigators), Funded by Clue (world's largest menstrual cycle app), 9/1/2017 – 12/31/2019. The goal was to examine potential differences in condom use and sexual behaviors when women are and are not experiencing menstrual bleeding. Clue collaborated with The Kinsey Institute. We researchers developed the questions for an online questionnaire and are conducting the data analysis. Clue provided advertising through their newsletter to recruit participants, translation of the questionnaire into 10 languages, posting of the questionnaires, and data collection and cleaning. The resulting cleaned database has data from 94,980 participants from 188 countries.

A Self-Guided Intervention to Promote Condom Use among Young African American Males. Multiple PIs with William L. Yarber. Funded by NIH/NIMH (R21 MH090892-01), $423,500 (direct costs $275,000; indirect costs $148,500) 5/17/10 – 4/30/13. The Centers for Disease Control and Prevention has declared that AIDS is a "state of emergency" in the US for African Americans – young African American men are especially vulnerable in this epidemic. Thus, the development of effective interventions tailored to this population is a national priority. This pilot study will (1) develop and test the feasibility of a brief, clinic-initiated, home-based, self-guided condom use program for young African American men and (2) identify variables that may mediate the efficacy of the program.

This project aims to advance our understanding of, among other factors, the role of cognitive and affective processes and condom application skills in explaining problems with condom use in young, heterosexual adult men. A multi-method approach – consisting of two studies and involving questionnaires, observational, and psychophysiological methods– will be used in conjunction with a skill-based intervention.
